QUOTES

“Since Dom’s story is told almost entirely from within, from his own interior, where events are inward turned instead of outward turned, I was strongly inspired to focus visually on the interior experience of the self instead of the traditional focus on outward events, society, and social norms. As such, the film is visually more cerebral, hallucinatory, dreamlike. And since there is no antagonist in the film, Dom is only at war with his inner self. In this sense, the interior world is the only world. His thoughts. His feelings. His experience. And ultimately recognizing his sense of being.”

SHAUN MONSON
DIRECTOR

“My hope is that audiences leave this film seeing a little of themselves in my story. Not because they’ve lived my life, but because we’ve all made mistakes, carried regret, searched for purpose, and hoped for another chance. If this story creates more compassion than judgment, then it’s done exactly what I dreamed it would.”

Dom's journey from humble beginnings is as compelling as the work he does today. Growing up in an environment of limited opportunities, the streets became both a teacher and a trap. Drug dealing and gang life, at first a way to help lift his family out of poverty, eventually led to prison. It was there, behind the concrete walls and steel bars, that he made the life-altering choice to transform adversity into purpose, and to rebuild his life on a foundation of integrity, service, and compassion.
